Background

Snehlata Bhardwaj is an educator and social worker at the Sneh Foundation. She is also active in politics for the purpose of meeting certain social goals.

Snehlata recalls that she had a challenging childhood and had to live within financial constraints. She lost her mother at the tender age of four, which was a heartbreaking incident for her and her siblings. She drew her inspiration from her mother, who was a social worker. When Snehlata was in the 10th grade, she lost her father, which was another heartbreaking incident in her life.

Purpose

Discussing her challenges, Snehlata says that when you venture on a path alone to bring positive changes, support doesn't come easy. Despite obstacles that came her way, Snehlata picked up societal issues like gender equality and started convincing people about them. She started her own school where she would teach all girls free of charge. Snehlata soon won the trust of all parents, and her plans turned out to be successful.

When asked about her mistakes, Snehlata regrets not being able to study at a private school due to financial constraints. She feels that her communication skills would have been much better had she studied at a private school. On that note, Snehlata wishes to ensure that no child is devoid of their desired education and has been working towards that goal since then.

Speaking about her achievements, Snehlata says she won the IGA award, which was presented to her by actress Madhuri Dixit. She has also been recognised for her work in Rajasthan. Snehlata feels the happiest when she receives love and hope from people who trust her and believe in her efforts.

Talking about her role models, Snehlata says she draws inspiration from her better half, who stood by her as a friend and life partner.

Her success mantra is to be patient and work on your language and communication skills. She advises the youth to be patient while being ambitious. She also suggests they improve their lifestyle and work with a happy heart.
